On Your Toes!

It was another socialite-studded night at The St. Regis for the plié-loving patrons of Atlanta Ballet. Where tutus and tights are left to the artists, the Ballet Ball aroused ravishing displays of floor-length sequins, sky-high heels, dapper tuxedos and feathers all in the name of dance. Partygoers clinked toddies and bid on luxe gift packages amid a fantastical winter-wonderland designed by the team at A Legendary Event. To the tune of white-gloved finger chimes, guests entered the grandiose ballroom to celebrate the beginning of a highly anticipated season, led by the famed Twyla Tharp and her world premiere ballet, The Princess and the Goblin. The buzz was palpable. Here, what our eavesdropping uncovered. —Jennifer Williams

TWYLA THARP

"Speaking of shoes, I'm hoping that the thickness of that sole is really a mattress."

FRED MCCAULEY
TO TIFFANY ODOM

"I'm not very tan right now."

MARK FILLION

"Sally, your birthday is next week."

MICHAEL REEVES

"We were talking about drag queens—Dancing with the Drag Queens. It's time we got them involved with the ballet."

CHRIS CARLOS

"I can't believe it's been almost a year since all of this began. [My daughters] are so excited to dance with Twyla."

SALLY DORSEY

"Actually my real birthday is tomorrow."

BAUBLE BUZZ Heavenly Metal There's tin for 10 and gold for 50, but when Tiffany & Co. celebrates a milestone, convention just won't do. In honor of its 175th anniversary this year, the renowned jeweler unveils Rubedo, a new metal that marries gold, silver and copper to create a warm, rosy alloy. It debuts this month in a set of elegant designs, including the pendant above that pairs the new creation with sterling silver. And the name? In alchemy, Rubedo is the highest stage of success, when matter and spirit fuse to create something of rare beauty—fitting for a company which has churned out lust-worthy jewels for 175 years and counting. 3500 Peachtree Road, 404.261.0074, tiffany.com —Isaiah Freeman-Schub
